Military Emancipation in Kentucky.

Major General J. M. Palmer Intely issued an order permitting passes to be given to negroes who desired to leave Kentucky. This caused a general stampede from the counties along the Ohio river, and thousands of slaves, have thus been emancipated. Some of the prominent citizens of Kentucky appealed to President Johnson against General Palmer's order, which is in effect a decree of general emancipation in the State, and the President telegraphed to the General Inquiring as to the facts. The reply of General Palmer is printed. He gives these reasons for his course:

"Large numbers of negroes were then in Louisville from the surrounding country, who had escaped from or travel, who had escaped from or travel, who had escaped from or travel, with the penalty and research, and the provision of a plan they had arranged for the search and of a plan they had arranged for the search and for several and free, with a per centam penalty as a feet for several penalty and recessarily.
